Trail Notes

The mileages and elevations below are approximate (don't expect the values below to match your GPS exactly).

- 0.0 miles, 3040': start at the Richard McKee Finger Rock Trailhead (parking for the Pontatoc Ridge Trail, Pontatoc Canyon Trail and Finger Rock Trail) [Waypoint thfr].
- Cross the road and walk north, several signs mark the beginning of the trail just after the entrance to a gated community.
- The trail climbs a short hill to a signed junction [Waypoint pc-fr] – take a right (left for the Finger Rock Trail) – the trail wanders thru the desert towards Pontatoc Ridge crossing several washes.
- 0.7 miles, 3250': Cross Pontatoc Canyon [Waypoint PT01] (there are a number of wash crossing before crossing Pontatoc Canyon) – the trail begins to climb steeply.
- 0.8 miles, 3450': Signed junction [Waypoint pr-pc] take a right (left for the Pontatoc Canyon Trail) in a few more minutes there is a nice rocky area just off the trail is a good spot for a break with nice views over Tucson [Waypoint PR02].
- The trail continues to climb at 1.4 miles, 3550' [Waypoint PR03] walk up a section of rocky slab – there are often several cairns to help you find the trail.
- 1.9 miles, 4100': Saddle great views! [Waypoint PR04]

- 2.0 miles, 4200': A few minutes after the saddle stay to the left as a very well-worn route splits off to the right – the route to the right is an unofficial route up to the top of the ridge. [Waypoint pr-pd]
- A sign marks the end of the official trail [Waypoint prend] – there is an obvious unofficial trail beyond the sign that will take you towards an old mining area (use caution/good judgment traveling off trail and around old mine works).

Although the cliffs were mined they are not the site of the 'Pontatoc Mine' that was worked in the early 20th century, the location of Pontatoc Mine is apparently somewhere inside the housing developments south of the ridge. The ridge/cliff area was prospected during and shortly after the Pontatoc Mine was producing, but what was found "apparently didn't amount to much" – see The Pontatoc mine in a north Tucson neighborhood and Mineral investigation of the Pusch Ridge Wilderness, Pima County, Arizona for more information. The older name for this trail is the 'Old Spanish Mine Trail'.

Portions of the trails in the Pontatoc and Finger Rock Canyons may be part of the network of trails built by Francis Knagge and his family when who built them to give their cattle access to more land for grazing – one of their camps was near the end of North Alvernon Way.
